

Experts: CA Must Act Now to Protect Youth from Social Media Dangers

May 11, 2022

As children grow up, parents and caregivers across California face the difficult decision of how to oversee social media use. But is that decision made harder by a lack of legal protections for children in the Golden State? Marc Berkman is CEO of the California-based nonprofit Organization for Social Media Safety. He said he believes Sacramento needs to act now to better protect youth from social media cyber-bullying, substance abuse, and even human trafficking. "Our main legislative focus right now is on Sammy's Law," said Berkman. "
