

Letter: Help moms with addiction

February 1, 2024

When someone is struggling with addiction, they only care about one thing, getting their next fix. They lose sight of who they are, what their purpose is in life, and even lose touch with their family. One thing many mothers never do is give up.

Being a mother is followed by endless love, devotion to keeping their child safe, and wanting to make sure they have the best opportunities. When they are faced with their addiction, things change. There is endless worry and many nights of lost sleep; constantly worrying whether their loved one will get sober and survive or whether they will receive the worst call a parent can get.

Mothers know that to overcome addiction, an addict must be willing. It's a constant battle that seems never ending. But they never give up.

When your loved one becomes willing to go into treatment, it is important to act fast. Get them into treatment immediately. Because the willingness may fade, and getting an addict into treatment really is a life and death situation.

Sadly, many mothers have lost their child to addiction and while they had always hoped they would get clean. The opioid epidemic has only proven to continue to worsen with Fentanyl taking the lives of many.

Finding out your child or loved one is using drugs can be scary and overwhelming.

If you or a loved one are struggling with addiction, reach out for help before it's too late. We help people all over the US find treatment and end the web that traps someone in addiction.

To read more on the subject, visit: <https://www.narcononnewliferetreat.org/blog/my-mother-never-gave-up.html>

Alina Snowden

Narconon