

Letter: We need term limits

August 9, 2023

As concerned citizens, it is crucial that we address the need for term limits and an age cap for elected officials in Congress. The recent decline in the health of U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein of California serves as a poignant example of the necessity for change. With all due respect to our elderly community, we must acknowledge that age-related issues can impede effective decision-making, ultimately affecting the nation's future.

Firstly, implementing term limits will bring fresh perspectives and ideas into the political arena, preventing stagnation and complacency. Long-term incumbency can lead to detachment from the realities faced by ordinary Americans, making it essential to regularly infuse Congress with new voices.

Secondly, an age cap is essential, irrespective of party affiliation or political persuasion. Advancing age may cause cognitive decline and limit an individual's ability to handle the complex challenges of modern governance effectively. By setting an age limit, we ensure that our elected representatives possess the mental acuity required to make sound judgments and safeguard our nation's interests.

It is essential to stress that advocating for an age cap is not ageist but rather a means of ensuring the continued well-being of our democracy. By encouraging the involvement of younger generations, we can benefit from diverse perspectives and innovative solutions to the issues that shape our nation's future.

In conclusion, we urgently require term limits and an age cap for elected officials in Congress to rejuvenate our political landscape and ensure effective governance. We must act now to create a brighter, more responsive future for our nation. Let us work together to build a Congress that better reflects the dynamism and diversity of our great nation.

Terry Dean Brooks

Crescent City