

Letter: Protect Social Security

November 25, 2023

In these uncertain times, it's imperative to underscore the significance of safeguarding and enhancing the Social Security Program. This vital safety net, which has been instrumental in uplifting millions of survivors, disabled individuals, and retired seniors, must remain a cornerstone of our society.

Social Security has proven itself as an efficient, reliable, and compassionate lifeline for those who have fallen on hard times. For survivors coping with the loss of a loved one, for individuals with disabilities striving for independence, and for our cherished retired seniors, it offers a glimmer of hope and a sense of security.

However, in the face of economic inflation, it's paramount that we take proactive measures to expand the program's solvency. By ensuring that Social Security remains financially stable, we can protect it as a bulwark against the rising tide of economic uncertainty.

Expanding solvency might require difficult decisions, but it's a responsibility we must not shy away from. Through careful management, thoughtful reforms, and a collective commitment to the welfare of our citizens, we can preserve Social Security for current and future generations.

Let us recognize the Social Security Program for what it truly is—a beacon of hope, a symbol of compassion, and a testament to our nation's values. It's time to prioritize its protection and expansion, ensuring that it continues to serve as a lifeline for millions.

Terry Dean Brooks

Crescent City